RUNFASTER
CONTENTS/CREDITS

INTRODUCTION
- Who You Are and How You Got Here 11
- Where You Came From 12

BEARDS: DWARFS
- Great Duchy of Westrhine-Luxembourg (AGS) 45
- How Dwarfs Fit Into Society

EARS: ELVES
- Tir na nÓg 47
- Tir Tairngire 47
- Zulu Nation (Azzanian Confederation) 47
- Duchy of Pomorya (AGS) 47
- How Elves Fit Into Society

TUSKS: ORKS
- Ork Underground, Seattle, UCAS 50
- Black Forest Troll Republic (AGS) 50
- Kingdoms of Nigeria 50
- How Orks Fit Into Society

Horns: Trolls
- Black Forest Troll Republic (AGS) 52
- How Trolls Fit Into Society

Norms: Humans
- How Humans Fit Into Society 54

Freaks: Changelings
- Furs: Shape-shifters 55

Alterations and Augmentations
- Alterations 56
- Augmentations 57
- Euculture 57
- Construction Kits 62

Life Modules
- Nationalities 53
- United Canadian and American States (UCAS) 53
- Confederation of American States (CAS) 53
- Native American Nations (NAN) 53
- Tir Tairngire 53

Formative Years
- Arcology Living 57
- Corp Drone 57
- Farm Living 57
- Fugitive 57
- Isolated Rural Upbringing 57
- Military Brat 57
- Orphan 57
- Rich Kid 57
- Street Urchin 57
- White Collar 57

Teen Years
- Corporate Education 60
- Farm Living 60
- Gang Warfare 60
- High School 60
- Home Toured 60
- Isolated Rural Upbringing 60
- Magical Education 60
- Military School 60
- Preparatory School 60
- Street Kid 60

Further Education
- Community College (55) 62
- Ivy League University (80) 62
- Military Academy (115) 62
- State University or College (65) 62
- Trade School/Technical College (40) 62

Real Life
- Bounty Hunter 76
- Celebrity 76
- Combat Correspondent 76
- Corporate 76
- Covert Operations 77
- Drifter 77
- Ganger 78
- Government Agent 78
- Law Enforcement 78
- Organized Crime 78
- Political Activist 79
- Postgraduate Studies 79
- Private Investigator/Detective (PI) 79
- Regular Job 79
- Shadow Work (Shadowrunner) 80
- Terrorist 81
- Think Tank 81
- Tours of Duty 82
- Tour of Duty (Mercenary) 82
- Tour of Duty (NAN) 82
- Tour of Duty (Tir Tairngire) 82
- Tour of Duty (UCAS, CAS, and CFS) 83
- Finishing Off Your Karmic Balance 84

NEW QUALITY
- 84
- Sample Modular Character Generation 84

SAPIENTS OF THE SIXTH WORLD
- 88
- Metavariant Type: Gnome 88
- Metavariant Type: Hanuman 88
- Metavariant Type: Koborokuru 90
- Metavariant Type: Menehune 90
- Metavariant Type: Hobgoblin 91
- Metavariant Type: Ogre 91
- Metavariant Type: Orni 92
- Metavariant Type: Satyr 92
- Metavariant Type: Cyclops 93
- Metavariant Type: Pomor Ian 93
- Metavariant Type: Giant 94
- Metavariant Type: Minotaur 94
- Metavariant Type: Dryad 95
- Metavariant Type: Nocturna 95
- Metavariant Type: Wakyambi 95
- Metavariant Type: Xapiri Thëpë 97
- Metavariant Type: Nartaki 97

Metasapients
- Centaur 98
- Naga 98
- Pixie 99
- Sasquatch 99
- ShapeShifters 100
- Changelings 101

Creating Something Different
- Creating a Metavariant Character 102
- Creating a Shapeshifter 102
- Creating a Changeling 103
- Random Metagenic Qualities 108

Positive Metagenic Qualities
- 111
- 360-Degree Eyesight 111
- Animal Pelage 111
- Arcane Arsemer 111
- Balance Responder 112
- Beak 112
- Bicardiac 112
- Biosoan 112
- Bone Spikes 112
The Last Night...

...And All the Rest to Come

BROADENED AUDITORY SPECTRUM
Camouflage
Celerity
Claws
Climate Adaptation
Corrosive Spit
Dermal Alteration
Dermal Deposits
Defensive Secretion
Electroception
Elongated Limbs
Fangs
Frog Tongue
Functional Tail
Gills
Glamour
Goring Horns
GreasY Skin
Keen-Eared
Larger Tusks
Low-Light Vision
Magic Sense
Magnetoception
Marsupial Pouch
Metagenic (Attribute) Improvement
Methhuman Traits
Monkey Paws
Nasty Vibe
Natural Venom
Ogre Stomach
Photometabolism
Proboscis
Satyr Legs
Setae
Shiva Arms
Thermal Sensitivity
Thermographic Vision
Thorns
Underwater Vision
Vomeronasal Organ
Webbed Digits

NEGATIVE METAGENIC QUALITIES
Adiposis
Astral Hazing
Berserker
Bioluminescence
Cephalopod Skull
Cold-blooded
Cyclopean Eye
Deformity
Feathers
Impaired (Attribute)
Insectoid Features
Mood Hair
Neoteny
Nocturnal
Progeria
Scales
Scents
Sclera
Slow Healer
Striking Skin Pigmentation
Stubby Arms
Symbiosis
Third Eye
Unusual Hair
Vestigial Tail

WHAT IT’S LIKE TO WALK THE NIGHT

HUNTERS HUNTED
Giving In
It’s You and Us

WALK IN THE SHADOWS

We Care a Lot
Dancing in the Ruins

GAME INFORMATION

Creating Infected Characters
Becoming Infected During Play

Positive Infected Qualities
Bandersnatch
Banhee
Doo-oo-qua
Fomóraig
Ghoul
Gnawer
Goblin
Graxel
Harvester
Loup-garou
Mutag
Nofoserat
Vampire
Wendigo

Negative Infected Qualities
Carrier
Infection, Magic, Resonance, & Essence
Magic and Essence
Infection and Resonance

Diseases
Sample Diseases

HMMHV Strain I
HMMHV Strain II
HMMHV Strain III

New Critter Powers
Adaptive Coloration

Corrosive Secretions

AS YOU AS YOU CAN BE

QUALITIES FOR GOOD OR ILL

Positive Qualities

Adrenaline Surge
Animal Empathy
Black Market Pipeline
Born Rich
City Slicker
College Education
Common Sense
Daredevil
Digital Doppelganger
Disgraced
Erased
Fame
Friends in High Places
Hawk Eye
Inspired
Jack of All Trades, Master of None
Lighting Reflexes
Linguist
Made Man
Night Vision
Outdoorsman
Overclocker
Percepetive
Perfect Time
Poor Link
Privileged Family Name
Restricted Gear
School of Hard Knocks
Sense of Direction
Sensei

Solid/Legendary Rep
Speed Reading
Spike Resistance
Spirit Whisperer
Steely Eyed Wheelman
Technical School Education
Tough as Nails
Trust Fund
Trustworthy
Vehicle Empathy
Water Sprite
Witness My Hate (Magicians only)

NEGATIVE QUALITIES

Albinism
Amnesia
Asthma
Bi-polar
Big Regret
Blind
Borrowed Time
Computer Illiterate
Creature of Comfort
Day Job
Deaf
Did You Just Call Me Dumb?
Dimmer Bulb
Driven
Emotional Attachment
Ex-Con
Flashbacks
Hobo with a Shotgun
Hung Out to Dry
Illiterate
In Debt
Incomplete Deprogramming
Infern
Liar
Night Blindness
Oblivious
Pacificist
Paranoia
Paraplegic
Phobia
Pie isu Domine. Dona eis Requiem.
Poor Self Control
Records on File
Reduced (Sense)
Sensory Overload Syndrome
Signature
Vendetta
Wanted

WHO YOU KNOW

INTRODUCTION

Breakdown of contact types
Legwork
Networking
Swag
Shadow Services
Personal Favors
Support

The Cost: What Does a Contact Want?
Cash
Services
Barter
Other

I owe you one (Gaining chips)

Improve relationship
Future service
Favors

Group or Organization Contact Options
Nature of the Relationship
Blackmail
SAMPLE CONTACTS 182

- JOHNSONS AND FIXERS BASICS 196
- BOSSES AND BETRAYERS 196
  - Used Car Salesman 195
  - TerraFirst! Activist 194
  - Taxi Driver 194
  - Talismonger 194
  - Trid Pirate 194
  - Taxi Driver 194
  - Trid Pirate 195

- QUICK CONTACT PERSONALITY GENERATOR 179

- Safehouse Master 192
- Pawn broked 192
- Pharmacy Tech 192
- Popular MeFeed Personality 191
- Recicladore 191
- Rent-a-Cop 192
- RockStar 192
- Safehouse Master 192
- Script Kiddie 192
- Sprawl Ganger 193
- Squatter 193
- Store Owner 193
- Street Doc 193
- Street Kid 194
- Talismonger 194
- Taxi Driver 194
- TerraFirst! Activist 194
- Trid Pirate 195
- Used Car Salesman 196

- BOSSES AND BETRAYER 196

- JOHNSONS AND FIXERS BASICS 196

- LIFECYCLE OF AN ENGAGEMENT 197

- The Meet 197
- The Run 199
- The Handoff 199
- I THOUGHT WE WERE FRIENDS 202

JOHNSON GENESIS 202

- A DUMP OF ONE’S OWN 207
- What’s in a Lifestyle? 208
- Comforts & Necessities 210
- Security 210
- Neighborhood 210
- Entertainment 210
- Services 210
- Assets 210

- GAME INFORMATION 216
  - Bolt Hole 216
  - Street 216
  - Squatter 216
  - Low 216
  - Medium 216
  - High 216
  - Luxury 216
  - Traveler 216
  - Commercial 216

- LIFESTYLE CATEGORIES 218
  - Comforts & Necessities 219
  - Security 219
  - Neighborhood 219
  - Entertainment 219
  - Armory 219
  - Cleaning Service 219
  - Discreet Cleaning Service 219
  - Discreet Deliveryman/Candyman 219
  - Garage 219
  - Greenhouse 219
  - Grid Subscription 219
  - Gym 222

- PACK YOUR KIT 228

- WEAPON AND AMMO PACKS 230
  - Colt Pistol PACK 231
  - Ares Pistol PACK 231
  - Big Boom Pistol PACK 231
  - Browning and Beretta Pistol PACK 232
  - Colt Pistol PACK 232

- Find us online:
  - info@shadowrunblog.com
  - http://www.shadowrunblog.com
  - (Catalyst Shadowrun website)
  - http://www.shadowrun.com
  - (Shadowrun Universe)
  - http://www.catalystgamelabs.com
  - http://shop.catalystgamelabs.com
  - (Catalyst/Shadowrun orders)
Subtle Pistol PACK  232
Light Security PACK  232
Janpanacorp Light Security PACK  232
Smartgun PACK  233
Street Stalker PACK  233
Heavy Security PACK  233
Cheap Soldier PACK  233
Ares Alpha Gunner PACK  233
Sniper PACK  234
Sportsman PACK  234
Trang Dartar PACK  234
Squad Assault Weapon PACK  234
Medium Machine Gunner PACK  234
Rocketeer PACK  235
Machine Gun Ammo Belt PACK  235
Amo Crate #1  235
Amo Crate #2  235
Amo Crate #3  235
Amo Crate #4  235
Amo Crate #5  235
Box of Grenades #1  236
Box of Grenades #2  236
ARMOR PACKS  236
City Slicker PACK  236
Go Anywhere Jacket PACK  236
Neon Nights PACK  237
Nightbird PACK  237
Stylish Suit PACK  237
Tactical Helmet PACK  237
Tusker Toughskin PACK  237
Tanker PACK  238
CYBER PACKS  238
Budget 'Jack PACK  238
Standard 'Jack PACK  238
Advanced 'Jack PACK  238
Basic Wires PACK  239
Advanced Wires PACK  239
Tourist PACK  239
World Traveler PACK  239
Ambassador PACK  239
Diploma-on-a-Chip PACK  239
Degree-on-a-Chip PACK  240
Doctorate-on-a-Chip PACK  240
Vacation-on-a-Chip PACK  240
Competence-on-a-Chip PACK  240
Datacourier PACK  240
Sim-sational PACK  240
Basic Combat Eyes PACK  240
Advanced Combat Eyes PACK  240
Eagle Eyes PACK  240
Rabbit Ear PACK  240
Bulletproof Jeff PACK  240
Basic Razorboi PACK  240
Advanced Razorboi PACK  240
Basic Speedboost PACK  240
Advanced Speedboost PACK  240
Basic Vatjob PACK  240
Advanced Vatjob PACK  240
Basic Rigpack PACK  240
Advanced Rigpack PACK  240
Street Samurai Classic PACK  240
Bioware Beef PACK  240
Bioware Lean PACK  240
Bioware Cat PACK  240
Bio-Computer PACK  240
Bioware Company Man PACK  240
LIFESTYLE PACKS  244
Bug-Out Bag  244
Street Rat PACK  244
Lowlife PACK  244
Success in the Shadows PACK  244
High Life PACK  244
COLOR PACKS  245
Cocktail Kid PACK  245
Gunbunny PACK  245
Drone Mechanic PACK  245
Mechanic Shop PACK  245
Eavesdropper PACK  245
Surveillance PACK  245
Breaking and Entering PACK  245
Jammer PACK  245
Medic PACK  245
Medical Patches PACK  246
Mountaineering PACK  246
Infiltration PACK  246
Demolitionist PACK  246
VEHICLE PACKS  247
Bunny Hopper PACK  247
Racing Bike PACK  247
Combat Biker PACK  247
Off-Road PACK  247
Non-combat Rigpack PACK  247
Combat Rigpack PACK  247
DECKER PACKS  248
Intro to Hacking PACK  248
Basic Decker PACK  248
Advanced Decker PACK  248
Basic Cyberdeck Programs PACK  248
Advanced Cyberdeck Programs PACK  248
DRONE PACKS  249
Basic Drone  249
Commander PACK  249
Advanced Drone Commander PACK  249
Rigger Support PACK  250
Dog Brain PACK  250
Basic Spy Drone PACK  250
Advanced Spy Drone PACK  250
Basic Combat Drone PACK  250
Advanced Combat Drone PACK  250
Air Combat Drone  251
Advanced Air Combat Drone PACK  251
MAGIC PACKS  251
Basic Magician PACK  251
Advanced Magician PACK  251
Magic Wand PACK  251
Magic Staff PACK  251
Basic Medicine Bag PACK  251
Advanced Medicine Bag PACK  252
Basic Spirit Stick PACK  252
Advanced Spirit Stick PACK  252
Magic Spear PACK  252
Buying the Basics  252

RUN FASTER CREDITS

Writing: Raymond Croteau, Kevin Czarnecki, Olivier Gagnon, Patrick Goodman, Jason M. Hardy, Robyn “Rat” King, Adam Large, Eric Lyon-Taylor, Scott Schietz, William Stroud, R.J. Thomas, Thomas Willoughby, Russell Zimmerman

Editing: Kevin Killiany, Philip A. Lee

Proofing: Lars Wagner Hansen, Mason Hart, Andrew Marshall, Tim Patrick, CZ Wright

Art Direction: Brent Evans

Cover Art: Echo Chernik

Cover Layout: Matt “Wath” Heerdt

Iconography: Nigel Sade

Interior Art: Piotr Arendzikowski, Daniel Comerci, Lucas Durham, Matt Hansen, David Hovey, Ian King, Ian Llanas, Dan Masso, Jason Metcalf, Victor Moreno, Mike Perry, Kristen Plescow, Mark Poole, Andrea Radeck, Mickael Rookard, Andreas “AAS” Schroth, Alex Stone, Eric Williams, and Alex Williamson

Interior Layout: Matt “Wath” Heerdt

Shadowrun Line Developer: Jason M. Hardy

Playtesting & Proofing: Natalie Aked, Rob Aked, Jackson Bruntsing, Karlene Dickens, Derek Dokter, Bruce Ford, Eugen Fournes, Joanna Fournes, Sandy Gamboa, Tim Gray, Kendall Jung, Alex Kadar, Peter Leitch, Dave Lundquest, Chris Maxfield, Jon Naughton, Whitney Pace, Sue Powell, Richard Riessen, Matt Riley, Mark Somers, Dylan Stangel, Ashley Turkowski, Leland Zavadil

RUN FASTER <<

CONTENTS/CREDITS  5
With his hands shaking uncontrollably, Victor Edwards tried desperately to close the last few clasps on his ill-fitting tactical vest. The vest, like the rest of his equipment, was a hand-me-down that once belonged to one of the four individuals cramped into the back of the little delivery van with him. At least they cared enough to give him some semblance of protection.

Only a few days ago Edwards was an insignificant executive with a no-name subsidiary of a giant megacorporation. But thanks to another group of men, not dissimilar from his companions in the van, Edwards had become nothing more than a discarded bit of refuse. He'd been played like a fiddle by a beautiful woman. And as that tale usually goes, he took the fall for her deception in the form of unauthorized use of his access card. No one ever mentioned the missing R&D files, only the breach in security thanks to his uncontrollable urges.

Despite a lifetime of faithful service to Aggregate Consumables, and in turn Ares Macrotechnology, the powers that be decided he was no longer of any value. And when you're no longer valuable to the megacorporations you are simply discarded, erased, removed from existence, and left to fade away; or, if you can pull it off, to slip into the shadows.

Edwards wasn't sure he was making a good choice, or even a choice. He was doing the only thing that seemed to have a chance of keeping him alive. Less than a day before, Edwards had been on the verge of using the only piece of gear he actually owned on himself. He had picked up the Ares Predator V for a steal when the company first started advertising them. He'd never had a desire to own a firearm before and had virtually no training on it, but there was something about that matte-black finish and wicked V that called to him.

But apparently it wasn't his time to die. The universe decided that it was the right time for the four men he was now sharing a vehicle with to burst into his life.

He remembered the door flying inward, twisting on the one hinge that held against the augmented jackhammer that Turk called a leg. He didn't know the big ork's name at that moment, but he knew he'd made him angry somehow as the ork bellowed a single word—"Gun!"—and leveled his massive shotgun at Edwards' terror-filled gaze. The massive barrel looked like a train tunnel.

In the back of his mind he spotted the lithe elf slipping past the ork but truly didn't notice him until he had blocked the barrel. By then Quill's hands were deftly removing the Predator from Edwards’ suddenly numb fingers. As the elf spun away, Edwards met the rest of the team. Tare, a velvety-voiced human who looked like he stepped right out of a trid flick, and Mo, another human, with a voice like gravel and a mohawk that looked like it was made of stone, were standing in the room next to Turk. The shotgun lowered, and Edwards’ new life began.

Sitting in the dank little room on the upper floor of an abandoned library in Puyallup less than a day later, Edwards still hadn't managed to get his bearings with the four men. He had no issue when they ordered him to go with them; it even seemed a little exciting. When Quill offered him a little something to help him sleep, he took it because the adrenaline and hard floor of Turk’s place had teamed up to make sleep impossible. When he woke up, head throbbing, Turk rushed him down to the van, which drove to the library much faster than his headache would have liked, and again he was prodded along.

The three present, Turk, Quill, and Mo, were arguing rather loudly about something called “blood magic,” which apparently was fueled by the life force of sacrifice victims. Edwards could tell they were talking for his benefit, making up one tale after another, each more outrageous than the one before. He felt embarrassed that these men chose such an obvious children’s bogeyman story in an attempt to frighten him. He knew they thought he was a complete corporate chump.

The trio went quiet when they heard someone approaching, and they were all seated around the remains of a conference table when Tare stepped in. He was dressed more casually than the others but still perfectly put together, and though the trio was obviously where they belonged when he came in, he still gave them all a disapproving stare.

“Hey Cobain, come join us,” Mo said to no one in particular. Victor was pretty sure he meant him, but they could have been talking to a spirit, some hidden companion, or virtually anything. He’d seen the shows about runners and the tricks they had up their sleeves.

“He’s talking to you, Vic,” Quill said while looking at Edwards. “I guess you’ve got a street name now. Beats me what it means. Maybe Mo will tell you someday.”

Edwards stood up and joined them but stayed quiet other than a quick thank you and polite excuse me when his stress-addled bowels unleashed a low force toxic cloud. Turk and Mo chuckled a little, while Tare and Quill said nothing. Tare then motioned to the empty seat at the table.

“Now for the real business,” Tare said. “Mr. Johnson wants the R&D files and a face-to-face with Betty to discuss the ramifications of her excess of independence. Err, Cobain—is our lure. I’ll make him look dandy, Quill, you move up to the rear balcony and get ready to slip in quietly.” Tare paused and gave Turk a quick narrow-eyed glare. Edwards guessed there was something he was missing, but within a few seconds Tare continued.

“Turk, you’ll need the ruthenium. I’ll put a shroud over the door and I’ll be fifteen seconds behind.” Wedge the door and I’ll be right behind you, but I’ll be sustaining a lot. Best be safe. You’ll be right on Cobain. When Betty buzzes him in, you need to be right behind him. Once you’re both in, my arcane assistance will fizzle. Wedge the door and I’ll be fifteen seconds behind.”

Edwards listened in growing confusion. He understood they’d given him a street name, pretty cool, though he didn’t understand it. He knew they were after R&D files and a person named Betty, and he knew he was somehow part of the plan; maybe even an important part. But none of that seemed to match up with being kidnapped.

“Quill, you watch Betty. If she makes us, give us the warning and keep eyes on her,” Tare wrapped it up with a very bright green kerchief sticking out of the pocket, and a short, mirthless chuckle added. “That little trick had cost the team some nuyen and Turk. He was willing to take a back seat and sit on the forger to make sure she didn’t decide to look for a better deal. It was probably a much-needed break. Cobain respected his longtime teammate, but thirty-six was old, on the back nine of an ork’s eighteen holes of life. A few days of much-needed R&R holed up at the Revere Beach MegaResort with a not-unattractive forger would be good for him.

After all of that, Cobain, Quill, and Gas Crank were left to do the actual steal. They should be enough. The team didn’t have anyone else right now anyway. Cobain had taken over for Tare almost five years ago when their former face got a break with Horizon and stepped from the shadows into the light. At the time, he’d felt a little twinge of jealousy, but since his own fall from the light, Cobain had only a few regrets. A woman he’d wished he was able to hold on to, but since his own fall from the light, Cobain had only a few regrets. A woman he’d wished he was able to hold on to, but since his own fall from the light, Cobain had only a few regrets. A woman he’d wished he was able to hold on to, but since his own fall from the light, Cobain had only a few regrets. A woman he’d wished he was able to hold on to, but since his own fall from the light, Cobain had only a few regrets.

10 Years Later
Cobain stared out through the rain-speckled glass at the skyline of Boston. The soft hum and lilt of classical music played through the ship’s sound system. It was louder in the ballroom, but continued everywhere, a link between all the guests, no matter where they were, and a reminder of what they were here for. Well, what most of the guests were here for; Cobain was not on board the XS10SHL for dancing, and neither were at least two other guests on board the 110-meter luxury yacht. Despite his professional purpose on the boat, he couldn’t help but think of how beautiful the city was at night.

“A beautiful view,” a voice behind him spoke, putting words to Cobain’s thoughts. He saw Quill’s pale features reflected in the glass as the elf stepped closer.

“Aztechnology ruined it.” Cobain replied to Quill’s coded phrase, telling him everyone was in place with his own affirmative. The team was a go to acquire the package that Aztechnology had brought on board.

As jobs go, this one had been smooth. Not because there hadn’t been opposition or unforeseen hiccups, but because Cobain had planned it well. Turk’s protegé Gas Crank was doing well. He had a good combination of Turk’s brute-force militaristic style and his own touch of anarchistic finesse. Six clean runs with the team was not a full season, but enough to shatter the rookie’s false sense of what “running” really meant. Earlier he had cleanly dealt with a half-dozen gangers playing muscle on the docks and a pair of genuine mob toughs who wouldn’t let their greed override their pride. Now he was wearing a sleek new suit with a very bright green kerchief sticking out of the pocket, and mingling with the other guests.

Quill had been his usual smooth and fast self. The decade since they’d met had not slowed him, though the cost of the upgrades he’d acquired always kept him looking for the next job. His quick fingers had lifted the half-dozen genuine paper invites they’d needed to get on board, and left behind copies with a few creative adjustments earlier in the week. The original invites would be one hour behind and ten kilometers north, looking to sail out of Marblehead by the time they discovered the switch.

That little trick had cost the team some nuyen and Turk. He was willing to take a back seat and sit on the forger to make sure she didn’t decide to look for a better deal. It was probably a much-needed break. Cobain respected his longtime teammate, but thirty-six was old, on the back nine of an ork’s eighteen holes of life. A few days of much-needed R&R holed up at the Revere Beach MegaResort with a not-unattractive forger would be good for him.

That sadness was Mo’s influence on him. The neo-anarchist chided him for being one of the “sheeple” on a daily basis for months after they’d met, especially when Cobain asked about the origins of his street name. Mo never gave him a straight answer, but Cobain found out the truth after Mo had lost his fight with lung cancer two months ago. At the man’s remembrance, Mo’s sister pulled out an old compact disc player from the end of the last century. She slipped in one of those old flat discs and told everyone this had been Mo’s favorite music. She talked briefly about the band, Nirvana, and the start of their countercultural revolution that was crushed by the rising power of the megacorporations. When Cobain introduced himself to Mo’s sister to ask about the band and the songs, she stopped him cold and asked him his street name. When he told her Mo gave it to him she hugged Cobain tight and told him how much Mo must have loved him to have given him such an honor. When she explained that Cobain was the last name of the lead singer, who had killed himself when Nirvana’s music had been bowdlerized and popularized, he understood.

Mo would have loved their current job. It was right up his alley. The target was a silver case, currently attached to the wrist of a very burly Aztlaner in the company of Juan Gualara, Director of International Infrastructure Analysis Programs for Aztechnology. The case holder was a member of his security detail, who also happened to be a former member of the Leopard Guard with Aztechnology Corporate Security. Gualara had been invited to the yacht in order to get ACS’s man in place to make a quiet deal with a member of TerraFirst! concerning the contents of the case. All information Mr. Johnson had left out at the initial meet, but Cobain had made sure was dug up, because working blind was no way to run.

When Quill silently slipped away, a shadow fading from the glass, Cobain turned his attention away from the lights of the Boston skyline. He calmly slipped the mother-of-pearl buttons back through the nearly invisible buttonhole slots in his Armanté suit coat, his movements smooth and confident. With the coat open, he pulled the concealed Fichetti pistol from its custom-fit holster and dropped it into the narrow vent below the window that kept them from icing over or fogging up. The pistol was no longer part of the plan for him; best be rid of it.

He made a few more cosmetic alterations to his dress, loosening his bowtie and twisting it askew, unknotting the left side of his shirt, and running his fingers through the side of his hair to disrupt the gelled perfection. The illusion he was creating needed only one final touch.

Drawing a small flask from his inner pocket, Cobain opened it and poured the contents into his mouth. His entire body shuddered when the rotgut synthwhiskey hit his tongue. He gave the liquid a good swish around his mouth before spraying the foul substance in a fine mist into the air before him. He briskly stepped through the spray, spinning to cover as much of himself as he could before slipping into character and stumbling toward the outer deck.

Feigning drunk, he staggered through a course that gave him a chance to spot all six of the people he needed eyes on. Juan, the Azzie exec, was inside seated at a table visible through the rear deck glass. Burly Azzie with the case was walking away from the table and headed toward the rear deck. TerraFirst! was standing near the fore, seemingly engaged in a pleasant conversation with Gas Crank. Lastly, Quill was leaning over the railing above, looking out into the night. Everyone was where they needed to be.

Cobain set the plan in motion by staggering along down the side of the boat. With one hand on the rail and the other holding his glass, he stumbled and sloshed champagne, worth more per ounce than gold, all over the deck and his clothes. He intentionally lost his grip on the rail as Burly Azzie stepped out onto the rear deck and toppled into the bulky Aztlaner.

“What the … watch it.” the Azzie blurted.

“Oh, my god. I am so sorry.” Cobain slurred while clumsily groping at the Azzie and splashing champagne down the man’s sleeve.

“I think you’ve had enough.” Burly Azzie said. He pulled Cobain back.

Cobain moved back with the pull. He’d managed to do what he needed to, and now needed to give the big guy a little space.

“Enough or not, my glass is empty again. Excuse me,” Cobain slurred and stumbled toward the server.

Burly Azzie grunted something in Neo-Nahuatl but did just as expected, heading around the corner and along the walkway at the side of the ship, moving toward TerraFirst!

Cobain gave him a small lead before turning back and doing his best stagger-walk straight at the big ruddy-skinned Azzie. He started his verbal tirade a good ten meters out to give the Azzie time to turn. When he got close he bellowed out, “Who are you to tell me when I’ve had enough?” and gave Burly a shove. It wasn’t much, but it got the desired response: a return shove.

With the plan engaged in a pleasant conversation with Gas Crank. Lastly, Quill was leaning over the railing above, looking out into the night. Everyone was where they needed to be.

Cobain said, “Enough!”

Cobain set the plan in motion by staggering along down the side of the boat. With one hand on the rail and the other holding his glass, he stumbled and sloshed champagne, worth more per ounce than gold, all over the deck and his clothes. He intentionally lost his grip on the rail as Burly Azzie stepped out onto the rear deck and toppled into the bulky Aztlaner.

“Enough or not, my glass is empty again. Excuse me,” Cobain slurred and stumbled toward the server.

Burly Azzie grunted something in Neo-Nahuatl but did just as expected, heading around the corner and along the walkway at the side of the ship, moving toward TerraFirst!

Cobain gave him a small lead before turning back and doing his best stagger-walk straight at the big ruddy-skinned Azzie. He started his verbal tirade a good ten meters out to give the Azzie time to turn. When he got close he bellowed out, “Who are you to tell me when I’ve had enough?” and gave Burly a shove. It wasn’t much, but it got the desired response: a return shove.

Cobain slurred and stumbled toward the rail. Burly Azzie had some boosted reflexes that made him quick enough to step forward and grab Cobain, catching him before he went overboard. The only problem was Cobain had a nicer system, along with some enhanced muscle fibers, and no desire to be caught. Instead he wanted the Azzie’s momentum. He used it to hurl the man overboard as he fell to the ground. As far as anyone watching was concerned it looked like an accident.

Above, Quill yelled, “Man overboard!” and leaped from the upper deck towards the water. His flailing impact ensured he didn’t sink too deep. He was able to almost immediately adjust his direction to head toward the Azzie.
Down the way, Gas Crank and TerraFirst! turned to watch the drunken altercation. When Burly Azzie went overboard, TerraFirst! turned to Gas Crank and raised a hand palm up. "Please back away. I must demand the aid of the spirits for that man." Gas Crank gave his best look of shock and took a step back.

When TerraFirst! closed his eyes and started to mumble, Gas Crank rescinded his backward step while engaging the muscle twitch that made a long blade slide from his forearm sheath. The mumbles turned to gurgles as Gas Crank drove the blade through the shaman’s neck, then ceased completely when he pulled the blade hard to the side and half-decapitated the man. He hefted the body over the side with one arm while driving the spur through the abdomen a few more times to puncture the lungs and organs. The shaman’s body hit the water only a moment after Quill.

Cobain stood and ran inside to call for help. The boat’s staff immediately leaped into action. The guests reacted as one might expect and quickly ran to the side of the banquet hall to peer out the windows at the scene. In moments, commlink cameras and recorders were taking in the entire scene and posting it to MeFeeds and P2.0 accounts.

In the water, Quill quickly reached Burly Azzie, who was barely able to stay afloat due to the case, and helped pull him toward the side of the boat. As they reached the hull, Quill deftly plunged a small pin into the keyhole of the cuff attached to the case on Burly Azzie’s wrist and pricked the small packet Cobain had pressed into the hole when he bumped the big Azzie earlier. Still struggling just to stay above water, Burly Azzie had no chance to notice what was happening. Quill clipped a D-ring over the handle of the case and slipped another cuff onto the Azzie’s wrist. He pulled the original cuff open thanks to the now acid-eaten lock and let the case fall away. The target case sank about three meters before the line attached to the D-ring went taut, then started rising. Before that case was even on the rise, Quill had already released the dummy case hidden below the waterline of the boat and inserted its chain into the cuff on Burly Azzie’s wrist.

When the crew pulled them both back up onto the boat, Burly Azzie was none the wiser. He spent the remainder of the cruise surrounded by medical personnel and never noticed his contact was missing. Quill spent the trip alternating between telling passengers he wasn’t a hero, it was just instinct, and telling the crew how sorry he was for making it two men overboard and that he should leave the rescuing to the professionals.

Cobain found a quiet place to open the case and switch the contents to a concealed container. He found a data chip, four pieces of parchment he was uncomfortably certain were skin, eight small leather—or so he hoped—bags, and an obsidian dagger that was meticulously decorated and remarkably unmarred, despite its frailty. Everything in the case screamed blood magic. He took some images and video, including unrolling the parchment to reveal some rather unpleasant images that made him thankful he couldn’t read the writing. He then copied the chip and sent all the data off to a friend.

Cobain’s years in the shadows had taught him that when it comes to Azzies and blood magic, you needed three things: contingency plans, knowledge, and an understanding that the job wasn’t likely to be over just because Mr. Johnson had the goods.
Maybe you had a mother who told you that you were special. Who said there was no one like you, you were wonderful in your uniqueness, blah blah blah. Or maybe you had a mother you regularly reminded you that you were nothing more than a mouthy drain on her finances, an inconvenience at best and a pain in the ass at worst, and if you somehow managed to wind up as nothing in this life it’s because you managed to take a step up from whatever nightmare destiny your horrid, wilted personality was suited for.

The thing is, no matter what your mama told you, she ain’t with you on the streets. (At least I hope not. Dragging your moms around on runs with you is embarrassing.) Good or bad, whatever she told you about yourself doesn’t matter. In the shadows, you’re going to make yourself whatever you want to be. You hope to hell you’ve got some basic skills to carry you forward—but to take advantage of those skills, you need a full set of tools to make yourself into the street legend you were destined to be.

What we have here are the tools. It starts with Who You Are and How You Got Here, looking at the various ways people slide into the shadows and how that shapes them. You’re going to meet each type of runner in your career, and the sooner you understand how they work, the better. This is also the kind of info that helps you understand yourself better—where you been, and where you gotta go.

Ethics, Codes, and Other Jokes strolls through the wacky world of runners who think there may be something to the job besides collecting the next paycheck. Maybe their dedication to outdated ideals is pathetic, maybe it’s noble, but there’s a good chance that one way or another, one of these codes will affect your life, so you better know what’s up.

Then we take a deeper look at the Sixth World around us. The Spice of Runners’ Lives scans the wide variety of jobs we can take to keep ourselves amused, while More than Skin Deep looks at the cultures and countercultures of many of the world’s metatypes, the better to anticipate some tendencies you’re going to encounter.

Construction Kits offers different approaches to making you, well, you. Use them to build yourself to be the shadowrunner you were born to be. Then The Mess of Metahumanity talks about the full range of metahumans you may encounter on the mean streets and gives you what you need in case you happen to be one of these freaks. No offense.

A few archetypes give a hint about the wide variety of professionals you can find in the shadows, and then things take a turn to the dark side with Into the Night, a look at the ghouls, vampires, and other Infected that make those really dark Barrens alleys so interesting. As You as You Can Be outlines the qualities that help make us all such a bunch of special snowflakes, and Who You Know details the people who grease the wheels of the shadows, helping you get gear, information, and other necessities. There’s a whole barter economy with these guys, and the better you understand it, the more you can take advantage of it. And while we’re on the subject of people to know, Bosses and Betrayers talks about the Mr. Johnsons that make our work possible, profitable, and dangerous, while offering tips on how to deal with them and survive to tell the tale.

But life isn’t all work. A Dump of One’s Own focuses on the glories of home, that special place where the likelihood of you being shot drops by sometimes as much as fifty percent. Take a look at the customization options it gives you to get the domicile you need without instantly hoovering up your next payday.

Then we’ve got Pack Your Kit. The megacorps of the world have filled up the shops and bazaars we frequent—or the ones we walk by, wishing we had scratch to spend—with lots of pretty, shiny things, and it’s not always easy to figure out what you need. We’ve arranged a lot of gear into nice thematic packs, allowing you to easily make selections that will let you take care of business in the best way possible.

That’s what’s out there. So get moving, jump in, get stronger, tougher, and faster, and maybe you can prove that your mama was right all along.

Or wrong.
Ask a hundred shadowrunners how they got into the biz, and I guarantee you’ll get a hundred answers. Maybe even more, since sometimes there’s no easy response (and some people are just smartasses). If you ask a kid what she wants to be when she grows up, she might say “shadowrunner” in the same way she’d say “test pilot” or “trid star,” but she doesn’t really mean it. When you get down to it, not too many people start out wanting to be shadowrunners. Despite how the profession is glamorized in the media, it’s a dirty, dangerous job, full of risks and backstabs and almost guaranteed to get you a nice cozy little hole in the ground before you’re old enough to have grandkids.

Present admins excepted. One of them, anyway.

Hush, you.

Bull

But there are a lot of us out there, and we all had to come from somewhere. How did that bright-eyed kid end up dodging bullets, slinging spells, or breaking into places where the best you can hope for if they catch you is that they’ll just kill you?

And while we’re on the subject: You know those hundred runners with a hundred different stories? They’ve also got a hundred different personalities. A hundred quirks, annoying habits, prejudices, and traits that their teams are going to have to put up with if they want to get anything done. Who hasn’t been on a run with That Guy—you know, the one who likes to eat limburger-and-onion sandwiches an hour before a run, or the one who obsessively pops his cyberspur every five seconds? Or the chica who won’t shut up about her pet whackdoodle cause? Face it: You’re going to be spending a lot of time in close proximity to these people while you’re doing biz, so it’s in your best interest to figure out how to overlook some things and learn to play nice together. Because killing them is unprofessional. Usually.

Usually’s right. I did a run one time with an ork who could clear a room with his ... uh ... emissions. He thought it was a riot. The rest of the team were ready to cack him by the time we got done. I don’t think any court would have convicted us.

Turbo Bunny

There are a thousand ways to fall into the shadows. Sometimes that fall involves a lot of screaming and smashing into things on the way to the bottom, and sometimes it’s more like (as the author of one of my favorite old dead-tree books once said) “sauntering vaguely downward.” But whatever way somebody does it, it almost always means some pretty significant life changes. Let’s take a look at a few of the ways you might join the Lifestyles of the (not-so) Rich and Shadowy.

THE CORPS: OUTWARD MOBILITY

News flash: Not everybody who works for the corps is happy with their lot in life. Sure, there’s something to be said for having a cushy job (or at least a job—the life of a wageslave isn’t always cushy), not having to worry about where your next meal is coming from, and having a doss that doesn’t regularly get ventilated by crossfire. I’m not sure what that something is, exactly, but that’s what they tell me. A lot of people like that lifestyle and even aspire to it, hard as it is for us to comprehend. But there’s always going to be those people who poke their heads up and twig to the fact that corp life has a price—namely, your freedom. Corps, especially the big ones, keep close tabs on their assets. That’s all you are to them: an asset. You live on company property, shop at the company store, eat the company food, and toe the company line. And if you don’t—let’s just say that the megas didn’t get rich by being forgiving.

The shadows get some of their best talent from these corporate misfits. They come in several flavors: the ex-company man who either had enough of the party line and decided to go it alone or who made some spectacular frag-up and got out one step ahead of liquidation with extreme prejudice; the bodyguard who let her charge get cacked (either due to negligence or on purpose); the chica who finally got a good look at what her precious corp was doing and had an attack of conscience; the hotshot mage or decker who got sick of dancing on a corporate string and realized their talents would command more nuyen on the open market; and plenty others.

- One of the best faces I ever worked with used to be a high-level administrative assistant. Anybody who knows anything about corp life knows that if you’re an executive, you do not want to piss off your admin—those girls and boys know everything about everybody, and they can frag you over six ways from Sunday if you don’t treat them right. She finally had enough of the life and jumped ship for the shadows—while managing to bring her pig of a boss down when she ratted out his creative accounting to the higher-ups. Last I heard she was working as a freelance fixer.

- Kia

- Corps get particularly nervous when high-value assets like mages, executives, and researchers fly the coop, because they know things that can hurt the bottom line if it gets out. Naturally they won’t spend the kind of effort going after Joe Sarariman that they would trying to get their hands on the lead scientist of a secret project, but don’t ever think you’re completely safe.

- Mr. Bonds

THE STREETS: OUT OF THE FRYING PAN

Unlike corp life, street life doesn’t usually have much going for it. Life in the trenches of the Sixth World’s sprawls is often quite medieval—meaning nasty, brutish, and short.

- Rather like Chainmaker.
- Winterhawk

- Say that to my face—I dare you.
- Chainmaker

The point is, most people on the streets are looking for a way off the streets, and shadowrunning can be one of the best ways to get there. Our ranks are full of former street kids who got their start running errands for the local syndicate, ex-gangers who seized an opportunity when it showed up on their doorstep, and criminal types (both organized and freelance) who got a chance to break out of one dangerous world and jump right into another.

- This is why you don’t usually see a lot of higher-up members of the criminal syndicates running the shadows. For one thing, they pull in a lot more cred doing what they’re doing, and for another, once you get to a certain level, you don’t tend to survive long if you go freelance.
- Lei Kung

- You left out one of the most reliable sources of runners from the streets: metahumans, especially orks and trolls. If you’re an elf or a dwarf, you’ve got a decent shot at the nice things in life, but try getting a cushy corp job if you’re three meters tall and look like a walking crime scene. Funny, but every job that isn’t on the “expendable cannon fodder” career track miraculously seems to be filled when one of us puts in an application. In the shadows, sometimes we actually get to show that there’s more to us than being big and tough.
- 2XL

- When most people think of runners who got their start on the streets, their minds go first to the expected stuff like the street kids, gangers, and low-level criminal scum. Dig a little deeper and you find all kinds of others who are a lot more interesting. In just the last year I’ve run with an ex-prostitute, a former bunraku puppet, a ghoul street surgeon (yeah, I wouldn’t do it again, but I didn’t have a lot of choice at the time), and a small-time gambler who got on the wrong side of the Triads. Shadowrunning makes for some really strange bedfellows sometimes.
- Rigger X
THE TALENTED: WHEN THE GOING GETS WEIRD

The shadows are a magnet for the odder end of society’s spectrum, and by that I mean people like magicians, technomancers, and deckers. Sure, good Matrix jockeys and most spellslingers (good or not) can write their own tickets with the corps, stepping straight off the streets or out of the corp schools and into plush jobs where they’re set for life.

They can, but a lot of them don’t. Here’s another news flash, kids: A lot of these people are fraggin’ strange. Let’s just say that for whatever reason, most of them don’t fit nicely into the prefab holes. You can fit a square peg into a round hole if you file off the corners, but try doing that with a three-dimensional construct that doesn’t even have a name. Then you’ll begin to see the problem with integrating some of these guys into your happy little corporate conformity-fest. And strangeness aside, both magic and the Matrix tend to elevate the type of people who are—let’s just say—individuals. When you’d rather claw out your own eyes than take orders from some mouth-breathing desk-hugger, giving up some security for the freedom to do what you want can get attractive in a hurry.

Not everyone who runs the shadows does it because they have no other choice. I made a conscious decision many years ago to step away from the constraints of corporate and academic life for a while in order to have more freedom to pursue my own path. Trust me—corporate magical programs don’t look kindly on maverick experimentation, regardless of how interesting its results might be. I’ve learned more about real-world magical phenomena in the shadows than I ever did at University.

Winterhawk

If you’re a decker and you’re good enough, it doesn’t necessarily even have to be a choice. I knew a guy once who was bringing in high six figures in a corp gig, while simultaneously maintaining three separate personas as shadowrunning deckers. Yeah, you heard me right. Nobody in the shadows ever saw him in person. The only reason he’s not still running is he got sloppy and accidentally took a job against his own corp.

Glitch

And of course, if you’re like me the corps don’t want you anyway, except as experimental subjects. So we don’t exactly get a choice even if we wanted it.

Netcat